Death of Judge Wardlaw.

David Louis Wardlaw died at his residence in Abbeville, at 5 1/2 o'clock, A. M., on Sunday the 8th instant.

Time was when this announcement would have sent a thrill of grief to every virtuous household in South Carolina. Now alas! sympathy with sorrowing kindred, not a painful sense of public bereavement attunes the mourner's lyre. Let it be written however, for those that are to come after us, that one of the Princes has fallen. Living through the golden period of our history and among those most eminent in virtue, in labors in learning and in intellect, no man of all his noble copemakers, more worthily, more completely or more ably filled the measure of his duty than did Judge Wardlaw. As Lawyer, Jurist and Judge, he stands unsurpassed. Harper was more brilliant, DeSaussure more accomplished, Frank Wardlaw more classic, O'Neill more practical, but none of them has left behind a more enduring and imperishable impress of learning, talent, strength and integrity than David Louis Wardlaw. He was one of the last of the old Carolina Judges and one of the best.

It is on occasions like these that we are brought to contrast the past with the present and while we exclaim in bitterness of spirit, "We may not look upon his like again," we realize something of the depths to which we have descended in these degenerate days when honors are exhausted upon the venal and corrupt and there is found for the good and great neither a place while they live, nor a fitting requiem in death.

Yet these shall live again. When we shall have accomplished the days of our purification, and history shall throw a focal light upon the disastrous era through which we have passed, among the venerable worthies of the last half century, the form of David Louis Wardlaw will stand forth in the page the peer of the noblest and best, to fire the heart of Carolina's youth with high resolves and incite to noble deeds, and heroic devotion to duty.

Henry Ward Beecher and the South.

An article attributed to the pen of the Brooklyn orator, is going the rounds of the Southern press under the heading of "Noble Pleas for Justice to the South." We desire to enter our protest against accepting anything as just to the South, however kindly said or kindly meant, that attributes to our people a blind and ignorant devotion to a cause "wholly wrong," under the control of "a few orators and political managers." To admit this statement as a ground upon which to justify the sentiments of kindness expressed by Mr. Beecher and other writers and speakers North, towards the unhappy, humiliated and misgoverned people of the South, is to receive the pleasing utterances under false pretences and to pervert the truth of history. The fact is that the Southern people were the best informed of all others upon their Constitutional rights, and in 1860 themselves led their "orators and political managers," reluctant, out of the Union.

The Union-Herald.

Major, Paula Cansimus.

Having introduced our Republican neighbor to our readers by some extracts penned in its most unhappy vein, it is but just that we give them an opportunity of reading something in its best style. Pertinent to this paper the Herald says:

"The Camden JOURNAL quotes some of our 'twaddle.' We do not mean to laugh in mockery over the misfortunes or good fortunes of the 'honest, the true and the good.' If a man happens to be entitled to these adjectives in spite of the times and human nature, we shall go as far as anybody in his honor and praise. But it may be a question how far the best man happens to be a proper judge in his own case, or what sweet uses of philosophy there may be for all of us in the verse of Burns:

Oh! wad some power the giftie gie us,
To see ourselves as others see us.

We are prepared to acknowledge the well founded claim of the JOURNAL to whatever distinguished regard may be accorded, fidelity to a certain political faith, wisdom in counsel, honesty in action and liberality in sentiment. But the JOURNAL will not expect the Herald to acknowledge any prescribed hereditary monopoly in such an honorable course. Nor will the Herald yield any of its comports in respect for the honor of the State or devotion to the public interests. As a representative Republican journal, it has faith in the sterling integrity, honesty of purpose and common sense of the people. The day must come when prejudice and bitterness shall wear away and we shall be able to pursue the right according to the lights before us. When that day comes the Republican party and organization in this State will be better and stronger than ever, because the eternal principles of justice and truth upon which it is founded will rise superior to the dust and passion and circumstances of the past.

The JOURNAL may never be convinced that the times have changed and that we have essentially changed with them, and may prefer the monarch of the people to what it is pleased to call the "tyrant of the mob," but over all men and journals who stand in its way the car of this revolution will move until it passes under the triumphal arch of one great consolidated Republican nationality.

And long after there shall be nothing left of the JOURNAL or the Union-Herald, except an honorable reputation, the intelligent traveler will acknowledge that even in our day and generation we have builded better than we knew."

The Suspension of the South Carolinian.

In lieu of any remark of our own upon the unfortunate, though we trust temporary, withdrawal of the Carolinian from its highly honorable and talented career, as champion of the right, in the front of the battle, we give room for the following extract from the circular of Col. J. P. Thomas. It speaks in moving and eloquent words, and we trust will reach the hearts of the people and find a response in their hearty support of the measures proposed to be taken to re-instate the paper:

CIRCULAR:

The undersigned are reluctantly compelled to announce that they are no longer able to continue the publication of this journal. With the hope and determination of establishing an independent organ to represent the sentiments and advocate the interests of the true and faithful citizens of the State, we have exhausted every means of our own; and now that we can do no more, are forced to relinquish the enterprise.

Many of our subscribers have paid considerably in advance, and we regret exceedingly our inability to supply their paper. But we trust that they will bear in mind that while they are thus perhaps losing a few dollars, we have exhausted thousands in our efforts to build up the paper.

The enterprise may be shortly revived under new business auspices, but upon the same political line, and under the editorial charge of Messrs. J. P. Thomas and W. H. McCaw.

THOMAS & LAMOTTE.

To Our Readers and the Public.

The suspension of the South Carolinian constrains me to address myself to my fellow-citizens of the State. As the founder of this journal, and as one who recently presented its claims to the people in a brief canvass in its behalf, it is due to myself and to them to make a statement in this connection.

The South Carolinian was established the latter part of January, 1872. Denied by the proprietor of the Phoenix the opportunity to carry out in its columns the role of free and independent journalism, the undersigned founded the South Carolinian. The object was to give to the people of South Carolina at the Capital an organ that would stand fairly and squarely for the public interests, maintain an elevated tone and contribute to the honor, dignity and prosperity of the Commonwealth—an organ that would handle with ungloried hands the plunders of the State, and discuss public men and public measures in the spirit of fearless, truthful and just criticism. The columns of the South Carolinian, from first to last, will show whether or not this promise has been fulfilled. I affirm that it has been carried out in letter and in spirit. Without regard to selfish considerations or pecuniary detriment, the South Carolinian has moved steadily upon the course it proposed to adopt, and now in the hour of its enforced suspension it is a proud reflection that its record challenges calumny and that the chief cause of its embarrassment is due to its fidelity to its trust. Scorning illegitimate gain, and cut off from the usual sources of even legitimate business, the South Carolinian has suspended because those whose interests it has upheld—the people at large—have not rallied to its support in sufficiently large numbers. Whilst it has, comparatively speaking, a large subscription list, yet a list three times as large would be but a reasonable return for the sacrifices made and the services done.

And now, fellow-citizens, let me add that it remains for you to say whether this enterprise shall be carried out or suffered to die. The South Carolinian needs only the "sinews of war" to spring into life with renewed energy and additional vigor. It needs only a becoming popular support. Eight hundred or one thousand new subscribers would insure the enterprise success from its new point of departure. And now I ask—speaking for our mother State, endeared to us by the memories of the past and the hopes of the future—will you not see to it that this banner unfurled in Columbia in the very face of the corruptionist shall fly again in triumph? Duty, honor, interest, the instinct of self-preservation: all alike suggest what your proud answer should be.

declared that he put no coal in his word, pulled trigger, shot his wholly unarmed, three times, and die like a dog, walked to the office and sent off the following dispatch:

(Signed.)

As may have been expected, perpetrator of this deed of blood, even to the barbarous instincts of their savage nature and unparalleled audacity and Cannibals, finds in the manly sympathies of the most cultivated circles New York society, excuse and justification. The newspapers teem with exoneratory laudatory accounts of the "chivalrous" treatment of the son and equally countable exonerations of the murdered father intended no doubt to create a public opinion that may cheat the law of its power. It is one to say that there is a more deadly tendency in some quarters. The subject of the Walworth tragedy.

"The extraordinary confession of Frank H. Walworth, so much talked of yesterday, and the comments made upon it, are not at all favorable to the prisoner's opinion now is almost universal that the Walworth came from Saratoga with express purpose of killing his father, that society would justify him. He evidently became a prey to his real or feigned wrongs, and had become so worked upon with them that he imagined any one could take the same views of them as himself. The prisoner bears himself in the cage in his usual cool manner, eats his meals regularly and smokes almost incessantly. He receives a few of his intimate friends who call, but says nothing about the order, acting in this respect according to the advice of his counsel. If the case is before the grand jury to-morrow, and a true bill is found against him, it is likely he will be speedily brought to trial."

Mr. Morris Phillips, of the Home Journal, to whom Mansfield T. Walworth dedicated his book on the life of Chancellor Walworth, his father, says he was astonished at the extent and character of the defamation of the dead father's character. Since his murder it has been charged that Mr. Walworth was an intemperate man, yet during a very long acquaintance he had often noticed and noted his abstinence. The author had been a welcome guest in his family circle, he never manifested the slightest inclination for drink; his only beverage was a glass of beer daily. Instead of being extravagant with his money and loud in his drink, he did not practice the common American habit of "what will you take," nor did he wear jewelry or make any display in his appearance not becoming a refined gentleman.
